

Animal communication is a great “TOOL”

Animal communication should never be used as a form of diagnosis. I personally do not believe it is the end and be all of everything. I strongly believe in culminating a sturdy foundation of like minds working towards the same goal. I work with veterinarians, (allopathic and homeopathic) farriers, (horse foot person) owners, trainers, massage therapist, pet sitters, etc...for the betterment of one animal. Neither one of us is strong alone. Together the animal receives well rounded input to their care. A farrier can not be his/her best if they do not know what kind of work the horse is doing, via the trainer/owner. The farrier can not do their best if x-rays are needed to be done and the veterinarian will need to translate, and the group of care takers can confer. Animal Communication can be used if there is still discomfort and the horse may have some input on their condition or it was animal communication that initiated the x-rays. Strange as it sounds the animals are much more attuned to their bodies than we are.

I had a consultation with a client and her dog. I was asked to let the dog know he was going in for surgery to remove a tumor. The dog said that he had two tumors. He gave me the visual image of the location and the description of the tumor, as well as body sensations. During surgery the second tumor was found in the area the dog translated to me. The veterinarian was able to make sense of the information I received from the dog. What I can't emphasize enough is to respect the privacy of others! Do not talk to an animal unless you are invited. It's rude. Allow people to live their life without your judgment; do not pollute your communications with your "belief system". Just listen to the person talking to you. Many times, when someone speaks we have our own background dialog going on in our mind. Be conscience of what others are saying with out YOUR mind static interfering. I believe listening is a lost "art form".

Animal communicators are nothing more than a source of information, to help, that's it. We are not God, we do not cure, we do not fix; we simply help. I figure we are like a compass. We assist in locating a direction to move towards. People do what they are going to do. We can't force someone to listen to the information passed on from the animals. Do your best to remain neutral in all situations no matter what YOUR belief system may be. Once you become emotional or allow your beliefs to interfere, your effectiveness to help will become weak! For example, I do not agree to breeding domestic animals of any kind, I believe we have too many. I must turn off my back-ground dialogue, my opinions and I must LISTEN to the animal.

Do your best and be your best. Enjoy what life has to offer you. Many words and actions people use tend to block them as well as you.

Don't allow criticism and fears of what others may think or say stop you from being more. You may notice that after working and practicing at this, that life has changed in a small way. You may begin to see it all new as a child does when they discover their hands or feet for the first time.

Take your time to breathe, be mindful as to where you are communicating from is it your heart or your head? Enjoy your intuitive side, your sixth sense, your knowing. You will begin to feel it strengthen.

Listen and take a leap of faith in yourself, to trust yourself. You can find the salt. It is not the props that help you achieve telepathic/intuitive communication it is you. You have everything you need built in. Please share what you have learned.

Thank you,
